To the interviewers of Jayce Bordelon,

I have passed this letter of recommendation to Jayce in hopes that he will share it in his future career aspirations. Jayce came to Synopsis as an intern for the summer and this letter is the least I owe him for his monumental efforts and innovations to our team.

When first being onboarded to our team, we placed Jayce on the same app development projects as our previous interns as a 'litmus test' for proficiencies. Jayce was the only intern I've ever seen come back, finished, asking for more tasks instead of asking for clarifications and training. What truly set Jayce apart from the others, however, was that he completed these tasks in a matter of days instead of weeks.

The feature requests that Jayce was fulfilling typically takes my team more than a month to roll out, with Jayce's help we reduced our time-to-market in half. Our expectation was that we would be training Jayce to work on simple tasks, but by the end of his internship, he was the one teaching us.

The drive Jayce brought with him is an invaluable asset that cannot be trained or bought in employees. That, combined with his proficiency in web development, solved complex problems with our existing in-house applications and exposed issues that have been hidden for years.

Before Jayce left, our team unanimously agreed that he was the most competent and self-driven intern we've ever had. We would welcome him back in an instant either as an intern or full-time employee. However, it is in my opinion that he should seek greater challenges.

Thus, I am leaving Jayce with this letter of recommendation in hopes that he can leverage it to aspire to a position of leadership at a company which will push him to rise to the peak of his abilities. Please feel welcome to reach out to me with any questions regarding Jayce's work here at Synopsis.

Sincerely,
